BANKER SEES FLAWS IN FEDERAL RESERVE

E. C. McDougall Tells State Association Politics Will Enter Into System.

PERKINS INDORSES PLAN

SARATOGIA SPRINGS, June 24 .- A critithe Federal reserve system by C. McDougall, president of the Buffalo, was made at the openof the twenty-second annual conion of the New York State Bankers Association here to-day. Mr. McDougall said politics was certain to enter into e and he expressed the opinion that there should be no Government officials on the board. The speaker said the bankers were not antagonistic toward the Federal reserve, but were walting to see bow it works out.

Mr. McDougall's remarks followe those of Benjamin Strong, Jr., a gov ernor of the New York Federal Reserve Bank. Mr. Strong reviewed the work of the bank since its organization until the present time, when it has peserve of $560,000,000. He urged every bank in the State to enter the Federal reserve and take advantage of the opportunities it offers. Mr. Strong also arged a more businesslike method on the part of banks.

The convention was called to orde by James H. Perkins, the president, who in his address, predicted an era of pros perity in the near future. The secre tary, William J. Henry, read his report showing a gain in membership of fortythree. The report of the treasurer, John H. Gregory, showed a balance of more than $15,000.

At a meeting of the New York State members of the American Bankers Asso ciation, the following were elected : Member of the executive council, James H Perkins; vice-president, Charles O. Ireland, Amityville; member of the general nominating committee, D. M. Topping New York; alternate, E. L. Milmine Schenectady.

Perkins Sees Presperity. In the course of his address Mr. Per-balanced condition.

"Our new banking law has just gone into operation. It is beyond question that a strong unified system of banking, which comprises the whole banking power of the country, is desirable, but it is desirable only if it meets the need of every section of the Country, only if it is the best machine available for carrying on the most important part of the country's industrial work. We have such a law. Does it meet our needs? If not. in what respect? How can we change it so that it may better perform its

In his address Mr. Strong said: "Our banks do not seem to realize that of our $4,000,000,000 of foreign commerce over 20 per cent, that is over $800,000,000, is conducted with the republics to the south of us alone, and this great trade represents 30 per cent. of all the foreign trade of the Central and South American republics. It has largely been conducted upon credits esbanks. It is our trade, and we should extend the credit upon which its continuance depends. If we do not do so, some part of that trade will surely

The suffragists "At that time the accusation was made that the bankers were adopting this tone for political effect, but I believed then, and believe more strongly to-day, that the slowing down which took place resulted in a splendid fundamental condition. To-day industrial statements show us not only that the profit and loss accounts have not gained, but they show a much more liquid, well balanced condition.

The antis were late in arriving at the hall. They said this was due to delay on the railroad, but it was whispered that some one had told them that the suffs were on hand to disturb their meeting and, if possible, break it up. The antis had not progressed far when the

These are the questions which are before us at this convention, and my object in speaking as I do is to see if I can influence the attitude with which we approach the discussion. Let us stand pready to criticise the new law, but only in a helpful, constructive way. Let us keep in mind the troubles of 1993 and be thankful that, even if there are some details of the law we don't like, it will eave us from the financial upheavals which have been so destructive in the past. Let us remem.

John J. Dunbar, one of the policemen, urged the suffragists to show respect for the antis, but they told him they thought they had a right to ask questions of those who assailed their cause. Recognizing that his appeals were of little or no effect, Dunbar let the suffs go on with their demonstration. SOBBING WOMAN TELLS OF TITANIC'S HORRORS

Three Survivors Heard in Court Fight on Limiting Ship Line's Liability.

Three Titanic survivors recounted Three Titanic survivors recounted before Judge Julius M. Mayer in the United States District Court yesterday their experiences during the last few harrowing moments before the great liner sank in the North Atlantic leefield. For one of them—Mrs. Lillian Renouf of Elisabeth, N. J.—the memory was too much. She wept as she told of being separated from her father and two brothers, whom she never saw again.

The witnesses were put on the stand by the attorneys for the Titanic claim-ants, who are endeavoring to defeat the White Star Line's proceeding to have its liability for the disaster limwhere the crew is in training, to tell his story to Judge Mayer. He described his father's efforts to get a place in one of the lifeboats for both of them. They were shunted from one boat to doomed vessel just before she plunged and swam to a collapsible lifeboat, from which he was picked up by another ifeboat in the morning and taken to the ship. Capt. Smith replied, according to her testimony, that no men were allowed in that particular boat. Her husband perished.

The witness said that her first realization of the nature of the accident came when she opened the port hole in her stateroom and found it blocked by ice. None of the officers, she said, warned her that the ship would sink. When one woman suggested that life was laughed at, said Mrs. Kenyon. The proceeding will be continued at 10:30 o'clock this morning.
